1. Beware of Predatory Journals! Predatory open access publishing is a rapidly growing exploitative business model that offers open-access journal publications that charge hefty publication fees to authors. These journals will publish just about anything and do not adhere to editorial and publishing standards associated with legitimate journals.

Consult Beall's list before you submit or agree to serve on an editorial board! Beall's List is updated regularly and lists criteria for categorizing predatory publications as well as the publishers and journals that meet those criteria.

The US Federal Trade Commission is cracking down on predatory journals! Read more here.

2. Do you wonder where your merit or promotion packet goes after leaving your home Department?

The path that merit or promotion packets follow after leaving the home Department is determined by a set of rules that define “delegations of authority”. Depending on your academic or faculty series and title, as well as the specific academic action that you are undergoing, determines the trajectory and review steps for your packet. The specific path for you packet can be found here:
